The property

This is a one-room apartment of 31 m² on the second floor of a solid 1960 block in Oberhausen-Osterfeld. The building has four full storeys plus a converted attic, ten flats in total, and a cellar. Heating is supplied by the district network. The energy class is E.

The condition needs to be stated plainly. The last tenant has moved out, and the flat is now in poor shape and requires extensive renovation. It is sold as it stands. According to the valuation documents, the building itself has been modernised at some point, but the interior of this unit has not.

One point needs attention before any offer. The property management has reported asbestos-containing black adhesive, a bitumen glue once used under floor coverings, in another flat in the building. This apartment has not yet been tested, so there is currently no evidence either way. A buyer should budget for an inspection and, if needed, professional removal before laying new floors.

A second flat with the same layout, on the ground floor and currently let, is also for sale in this building. The seller would prefer to sell both together.

The location

Oberhausen is a city of around 210,000 people in the Ruhr, in North Rhine-Westphalia, lying between Duisburg and Essen. Osterfeld, in the north of the city, was an independent town until it merged with Oberhausen in 1929, and it still has its own small centre around the Osterfelder Markt.

The flat is in an established residential street. Shops and everyday services are nearby, according to the seller. The bus stop Osterfeld Mitte and the railway station Oberhausen-Osterfeld Süd can be reached easily.

Who it suits. It suits a buyer who can organise or carry out a full renovation, including an asbestos check, and who wants a small vacant unit to let out afterwards, possibly together with the let ground-floor flat.
